

banking, finance and insurance

overview

Few industries have experienced more profound change in recent years than financial services. A challenging economic environment and increasingly intricate regulations—particularly with regards to liquidity and transparency—have placed unprecedented new complexities on financial services executives and legal teams.

In this environment, institutions must respond swiftly to regulatory change and market shifts, all while meeting the increasingly sophisticated needs of their customers and responding effectively to their rivals' competitive maneuvers.

McMillan helps banks, insurance companies, investment dealers and other financial services companies navigate this complex regulatory and business environment. Simply put, we help clients anticipate change and position themselves for success.

Our lawyers are not only experts in their particular practice, they also bring rich financial services industry experience. Whether we are advising a client on employment issues, new products, expansion into new geographies, or the legal aspects of the most elaborate international financial transactions, we assemble the right team with the right expertise to address each matter.

McMillan teams work closely with in-house legal counsel, regulators and other governmental bodies. We help clients minimize the risk of litigation. But when it cannot be avoided, we effectively represent them to protect their interests and preserve shareholder value.

Our number one goal is to help clients succeed in one of the world's most competitive industries.
