profile

Chris Scheitterlein is an associate with McMillan's Regulatory Group in Ottawa. Chris's practice focuses primarily on international trade law matters, including compliance with Canadian trade laws on import and export controls, economic sanctions and customs, as well as antidumping and countervailing trade remedy cases before the Canadian International Trade Tribunal and the Canada Border Services Agency.

Chris works with a wide range of domestic, foreign and multi-national clients to help them do business in Canada.

Prior to joining McMillan, Chris developed most of his expertise with federal agencies and departments where he advised internal clients on economic sanctions and export controls, anti-money laundering, corruption, and fraud. In addition to providing training to various teams, he worked on a variety of small-scale export transactions, aerospace financing deals, as well as multi-hundred-million dollar projects in the infrastructure and energy sector.
