access capital

overview

Growing a business – through acquisition, investing in equipment or people, moving into new jurisdictions, or launching new products or services to meet market demand – requires capital. Over the last few years of economic turmoil, however, accessing that capital has proved elusive for many companies.

When they do succeed in sourcing funding, they still need to close the offering in the most efficient manner, often across borders and taking into account complex regulations.

Understanding the complexities of accessing financing in the current market and keeping up with constantly changing regulatory requirements calls for advice from practitioners who have industry-specific knowledge and experience.

McMillan's lawyers have worked with clients across Canada and globally to help match their growth needs with the right financing alternatives and manage the completion of these transactions. Our expertise covers raising capital in public and private markets, public-private partnerships, structured finance, securitization and derivatives.
