It's not easy managing today's multi-generational workforce, with managers often struggling to balance competing needs and priorities. Dr. Karyn, who has worked closely with leading organizations and specializes in managing younger generations, strongly believes that developing great managers and mentors is the glue that holds the multi-generational workforce together. Specifically, when managers learn how to exercise their power of influence, instead of their power of authority - this superpower fuels productivity, communication, engagement and retention.

Audiences will learn:

- How to understand the “cultural DNA” of all 5 generations (including Gen Z)
- How Gen Y is different from previous generations & why this is critical to leading them effectively
- How to uncover & maximize the powerful strengths of younger generations
- Three practical strategies, that are time & cost effective, for building an effective multi-generational workforce
