This morning, Ontario welcomed a new Premier, a new Provincial Government and a new Cabinet. Premier Ford will be joined by 20 of his colleagues at the Cabinet table, broken down as follows:

The Members of Cabinet are as follows:

- Given the early announcements coming out of the Premier Ford's office during the election campaign and the transition, some of those who can expect, in the early days of the mandate, to be the most active with significant expectations placed on them, will include:
 - Minister Rickford, who as Minister of Energy will be expected to immediately replace the Board and management of Hydro One and quickly dismantle Green Energy Act programs;
 - Minister Phillips, who as Minister of Environment, will be responsible for quickly extricating Ontario from the Cap and Trade program;
 - Minister Fedeli, who as Minister of Finance, will have to figure out how to pay for various campaign commitments, as well as any costs associated with unwinding Cap and Trade;
 - Minister McNaughton, who as Minister of Infrastructure, will have to get moving early on the subway file if the Government wants to be able to point to any concrete progress before the next election;
 - Minister Elliott, who as Minister of Health, will be tasked with resolving outstanding, and long-standing, disputes with the Province's doctors;
 - Minister Thompson, who as Minister of Education, will be called upon to address the sex education curriculum right away;
 - Minister Wilson, who as Minister for Job Creation, will be expected to deliver on Premier Ford's primary promise of making Ontario "Open for Business", ideally with some initial successes announced by the end of the year.

Expect this to be a quick-moving Government. They are unlikely to get bogged down with lengthy studies and reports in the initial stages of their mandate. Rather, look for some quick announcements on some key files. Being able to point to some immediate action as "promise made, promise kept" will then give the Government the leeway they need to take a step back and give more detailed consideration to the next wave of policies and programs in Year 2.
