McMillan is honoured to be recognized as a top employer on Forbes' 10th anniversary edition of Canada's best employers for 2025. Ranking sixth on a national list of 300 organizations and first in the professional services category—this recognition solidifies McMillan's place amongst the country's leading companies and further reinforces its position as a market leader with a strong and vibrant firmwide culture.

"I want to congratulate everyone at McMillan for helping us achieve this special recognition," said Bruce Chapple, CEO and Managing Partner. "Our firm stands on unwavering principles that define who we are and make us a trusted choice for our clients, our people and our future firm members. With exceptionally talented and strong-valued individuals leading the way, we are well-positioned to pursue our journey as a law firm and reputation as an employer of choice."

Over the years, McMillan has prioritized cultivating a supportive and cohesive workplace that values diversity, inclusivity and growth. With innovative HR policies and programs in place, the firm fosters a sense of belonging and continuous learning. This commitment to maintaining an exceptional work environment for all firm members aligns with McMillan's broader strategic objectives, ensuring clients receive unparalleled service and expertise.

In conjunction with market research firm Statista, Forbes' ranking process is determined via a survey administered to more than 40,000 Canadian workers employed by companies and institutions with at least 500 employees based in Canada. Responses are then tallied and mixed with data from the past three years, resulting in scores determining the top 300 organizations on the list.
