McMillan's International Trade and Procurement groups are very pleased to welcome back Peter Jarosz to the firm!

Prior to joining McMillan, Peter was legal counsel at the Canadian International Trade Tribunal (CITT). He brings over 20 years of trade law experience, including six years at this independent quasi-judicial body. The Tribunal plays a key role in administering and adjudicating international and Canadian rules that govern trade and government procurement.

In addition to his focus on anti-dumping, countervailing (anti-subsidy) and safeguards, Peter leads matters relating to import / export compliance, including export controls, defence production and controlled goods, customs duties, and Canada-United States-Mexico Agreement (CUSMA) issues. He also brings great know-how in defending and challenging federal government procurement actions.

With insight gained through his invaluable experience with Canada's tribunal on trade and procurement, and extensive expertise in international trade law, Peter is a welcome addition to the firm's growing regulatory practice, and an asset to colleagues and clients.
