Categories: People, Law Students

Rhys Godin is an articling student at McMillan.

During his legal studies, Rhys worked at the Downtown Legal Services (DLS) Clinic at the University of Toronto and as an editor at the Faculty's Law Review. Rhys also completed a Clinical Legal Externship at the University of Toronto Entrepreneurship Hatchery providing legal research and information to student-startups.

Prior to attending law school, Rhys interned at the C.D. Howe Institute where he researched and authored on topics in Urban Economics.

Rhys completed his Juris Doctor and Masters Degree in Economics at the University of Toronto, and his undergraduate in Economics with distinction at Simon Fraser University.

Rhys completed two summer rotations at McMillan before returning as an articling student.
